Let's Start!

There are different ways of traveling.

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about unlikely events or fairly certain conditions that will be fulfilled in present, past or future in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about social issues, beliefs, opinions and moral or personal dilemmas.
- I can express obligations and recommendations.
- I can express that a fairly certain condition will be fulfilled.

Ask your partner:

- Would you like to travel to do humanitarian work? Why or why not?
- Do you think ecotourism is a good idea? Why or why not?

Let's Explore!

Ecotourism will help conserve our environment.

* "Conserve the environment" means to protect the air, land and water and prevent damaging changes.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

If you're thinking about going on a trip, why not do more than just visit temples or sunbathe on the beach? Humanitarian travel is a way for travelers to improve the lives of people in certain countries, get to know local cultures, make new friends, learn about themselves, and gain a new perspective and new skills.

Generally, humanitarian tourists had better be in good health and have a desire to explore. For people finishing secondary school, or those who have graduated from university, there are gap year programs. Other programs are designed for retirees. If you have a specific skill, you can work for a non-profit organization overseas.

Ecotourism is an option that works well for the environmentally conscious. It is a great way to travel to a natural area and help sustain the well-being of the local community. Since examples of ecotourism abound, a potential ecotourist had better learn as much as they can about the trip that awaits them. TIES has created a set of criteria that can be used to determine if a travel project can be considered ecotourism. An example is participating in an Eco-School in Guatemala, in which student tourists learn about the environmental protection and build awareness of cultural landmarks, such as the ancient Mayan ruins of Tikal.

You had better consider a few other factors before signing up with a travel operator. Volunteering sometimes passes for unregulated, inexpensive labor. Additionally, if you choose a tour package that contains an element of volunteering, you may be buying a lower quality tour at a higher price. Organizations had better be able to prove they have close and permanent local ties, and their projects respond to needs expressed by the local community. Individuals interested in this type of experience had better do research and compare options carefully.

Let's Practice!

Let's be ecotourists!

Instructions: Match the words from Column A with the definitions in Column B. Write a sentence with each of the words in Column A.

COLUMN A

1. Landmark
2. Criteria
3. Ecotourism
4. Volunteerism
5. Gap year
6. Tour package

COLUMN B

- a. a detailed list of actions or descriptions of a product that are used for evaluation purposes
- b. a natural or human-made structure that is distinct from everything around
- c. travel arrangements, often including transportation, food, accommodation and excursions, grouped and sold by a travel agency
- d. one year many students take to work or travel after high school before entering university

4. explore, / If you / eco-friendly / you can / way. / want to / in an / do it

Extension Activity

Create a brochure for a humanitarian trip or an ecotourism experience.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Choose a destination for a humanitarian trip or an ecotourism experience. Go online for ideas.
- Read information about your choice of destination. Find 2 - 3 different sources of information.
- Prepare a brochure a travel agency could use to sell the trip. In the brochure, write 3 - 4 paragraphs describing the trip. Answer the questions: What will the person do and see? How will the trip be useful to the local population?
- Include photos and images in your brochure.
- Invent details for the trip, like price and details related to accommodation, food and transportation.
- Present your brochure to a partner. In your presentation, invite people to ask questions about the trip.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I identify humanitarian and ecotourism experiences.

I write a text describing the travel experience.

Target Words

- ecotourism (noun): a form of travel that includes learning about and protection of the natural world
e.g. If you are interested in environmental protection, ecotourism is another way of showing that you are a principled tourist.
- landmark (noun): a natural or human-made structure that is distinct from everything around e.g. Student tourists learn about environmental protection and build awareness of cultural landmarks.
- gap year (noun): one year many students take to work or travel after high school before entering university e.g. For people finishing secondary school, or those who have graduated from university, there are gap year programs.
- criteria (noun): a detailed list of actions or descriptions of a product that are used for evaluation purposes
e.g. TIES has created a set of criteria that can be used to determine if a travel project can be considered ecotourism.
- tour package (noun): travel arrangements, often including transportation, food, accommodation and excursions, grouped and sold by a travel agency
e.g. Additionally, if you choose a tour package that contains an element of volunteering, you may be buying a lower quality tour at a higher price.

Learning Points

Had Better

You use had better in spoken English when you want to express that something is a good idea to do or not. You can use it in place of should and ought to.

In most cases, had better has a slightly stronger meaning than should and ought to. It implies that there might be a negative consequence if you do not do the action.

For example:

You had better see the dentist about that tooth. (If you don't, it could get much worse.)

You do not use had better to talk about the past. Instead, you need to use should have or ought to have.

The negative form is had better not and in questions, the subject comes after had.

For example:

He'd better not be late again - he's already in hot water with the boss.

Had we better go earlier?*

Examples:

- Generally, humanitarian tourists had better be in good health and have a desire to explore.
- Since examples of ecotourism abound, a potential eco-tourist had better learn as much as they can about the trip that awaits them.
- You had better consider a few other factors before signing up with a travel operator.
- Organizations had better be able to prove they have close and permanent local ties, and their projects respond to needs expressed by the local community.
- Individuals interested in this type of experience had better do research and compare options carefully.

Learning Points

First Conditional and Zero Conditional: Conditional Clause and Main Clause

Let's look at the two components of a conditional sentence: the conditional clause (If clause) and the main clause (result clause).

Zero Conditional

We use the Zero Conditional to talk about things that are always true.

The structure of the Zero Conditional is the following: - If + Simple Present (if clause) + Simple Present (result clause).

For example:

If you don't eat, you die.

If you heat ice, it melts.

First Conditional

We use the First Conditional to talk about real possibilities in the present or the future.

The structure of the First Conditional is the following:

If + Simple Present, will + Simple Present

For example:

If we do not reduce the release of greenhouse gases now, global temperatures will rise.

In the conditional clause, you use If + Simple Present verb.

For example:

If you see the teacher, ...

In the main clauses, sometimes called the result clause, you have three choices.

1. will + infinitive (First Conditional)

If you see the teacher, you will have to ask her about the test.

2. Present tense (Zero Conditional)

If you see the teacher, the class is starting.

3. Imperative

If you see the teacher, tell him I will be late.

Examples:

- If you are thinking about going on a trip, why not do more than just visit temples or suntan on the beach?
- If you have a specific skill, you can work for a non-profit organization overseas.
- Additionally, if you choose a tour package that contains an element of volunteering, you may be buying a lower quality tour at a higher price.
- If you travel responsibly, you can make a difference for both yourself and the local community.
